Christian Science Monitor The United States is the most Christian country in the world, according to a new poll. Christian Science Monitor staff writer Robert McCartney got a scoop from the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life: Massachusetts, home of the oldest and most influential American Protestant denomination, the Congregationalists, is the most religious state in the nation with 56.5 percent of residents saying they are Christians. This is a fairly dramatic shift from the 1950s and 1960s, when the federal government sponsored programs to promote secularism and the non-traditional, including an absence of theistic language in public schools, government business and government spending. California and New York were just behind with more than 54 percent, followed by New Mexico, Utah, Nevada and Oregon. New York state, home to New York City, has a large population of Jews and some of the world's largest concentrations of Buddhists and Hindus. Posted by Michael on Wednesday, Mar, 23, 2007 9:32 AM (EDT): cathy: i'm kinda dubious that the pollsters asked them whether they regularly attend church. i suppose they might have said "yes, and on the good days" but they
