RPG: "This title from Omega Force is a very good game... The visual presentation is a thing of beauty, and they keep a steady pace in the game world. They also try to emulate the classic style of Final Fantasy gameplay, and it works well." The Games Company. RPG: "Fantasy... fairies... grandiose color schemes... What can you do? You can't help but feel you've been here before, but that's actually a good thing. Fantasy is usually a bit cerebral, and this is a bit of a blast. It's definitely a game you can sink hours into. If you like fantasy or RPGs, this might be the one to pick up." PC Weekly. RPG: "Omega Force's first entry into the world of classic JRPGs is a fairly enjoyable and varied title with a lot of content, and while it takes the basic RPG formula of exploration, leveling, gear acquisition and grinding and deviates from it in several interesting ways, it still provides a great RPG experience that will keep fans of the genre coming back for more. The many environments and the many different dungeons packed in should also keep players entertained." GAME ZONE. RPG: "Janken is an excellent tactical RPG that's loaded with content, and it offers a casual approach to the genre that's refreshing. The setting is beautifully rendered, the monsters and bosses are interesting, and the base battles are surprisingly fun. There's even an online co-op mode with a dedicated mechanic that's fun, as well as a great JRPG action mode." Game Informer. RPG: "Janken combines the real-time turn-based combat and on-the-map exploration of a classic JRPG with a surprisingly expansive cast of creatures to battle. The myriad combinations of available classes, abilities, and characters are enough to keep even the casual RPG fan interested. " RPG Site. RPG: "Janken is a fun, challenging tactical RPG that pays homage to classic JRPGs with a healthy dose of charm. The retro feel that's been going around is awesome and makes the game feel nostalgic, but there's also a fun twist to the formula that keeps the game from becoming just another rehashed title of yesterday. While the gameplay mechanics are fun and bff6bb2d33

I would like to turn off client side validation of maxRequestLength when using Elmah 2.0. I am aware that the text can be configured in the web.config, but I am unsure as to what the config would look like. I would like to turn off both client side and server side validation, and I know that I can turn off server side validation using: but I have found no documentation on how to turn off client side validation. A: Elmah.Mvc.csproj has this line of XML for the customErrors element If you want to silence that particular error, I think you'll have to remove it and then handle it yourself in the Elmah.ErrorSignal.cshtml view. To silence all the error messages, you could also set IncludeValidationRules = false. Edit You mentioned that you want to turn off all client side validation. That's a slightly more complicated problem. The problem is that Elmah uses MessageHandlerBase.OnException to do the validation. That class uses the ValidateInputAttribute class to allow you to add a ValidationMessage. How does it know what's valid? It looks in the request. That means that to turn off all validation, you'd have to replace everything that looks for something in the request. That includes the validation of everything handled by MessageHandlerBase. Given that requirement, there are three possible solutions. (Note: I'm assuming that you're interested in turning off client side validation only.) If you're able to refactor to throw any exceptions that might cause client side validation (i.e. everything that would cause the base class to use ValidateInputAttribute), then you can add the class-level attributes AllowInputAttribute and AllowHtmlInputAttribute to the class. This is not ideal
