Increased plasma ghrelin levels in patients with schizophrenia are not related to positive symptoms but partly correlate with negative symptom severity. Ghrelin is a novel gastrointestinal peptide which is mainly secreted from the gastric mucosa. Ghrelin is involved in eating behaviour, starvation and satiety and may be related to psychotic symptoms. The purpose of this study was to examine whether ghrelin levels in peripheral plasma of patients with schizophrenia are increased and whether they are related to psychotic symptoms. Plasma ghrelin levels of 32 medication-free patients with schizophrenia and 32 age- and sex-matched healthy controls were compared. In addition, plasma ghrelin levels were correlated with positive, negative and total symptom scores as well as eating behaviour as rated by the first-degree relatives of the patients. Twenty patients had developed their psychotic symptoms before the age of 18 years and received antipsychotic treatment after the onset of psychosis. Plasma ghrelin levels were higher in patients with schizophrenia compared with control subjects. Plasma ghrelin levels were positively correlated with negative symptoms ($r = 0.416$, $p = 0.028$). In the patient group, plasma ghrelin was not associated with positive symptom scores ($r = 0.269$, $p = 0.142$). Of note, plasma ghrelin levels were positively correlated with eating behaviour, the strongest correlation being with the 'degree of parental care' for the patients ($r = 0.408$, $p = 0.035$). This study shows for the first time that plasma ghrelin levels are increased in patients with schizophrenia and are related to negative symptoms. Furthermore, ghrelin levels in the blood are influenced by non-affective symptoms in schizophrenia. The result is consistent with evidence from research
